

Predicted temperatures are often underestimated

This plot shows the average difference between observed and predicted temperatures per week in the US. Predictions are given 12, 24, 36, and 48 hours in advance. A positive value means that the actual temperature was higher than predicted.

